Abstract

In a modern society, characterized by mobility and urbanization, there is a permanent transformation of the urban socio-cultural space. Urban identity is the result of the person's identification with the urban community, the architectural structure of the city and the lifestyle of its inhabitants.

The article presents a theoretical analysis of the phenomenon of identity in the context of psychological and pedagogical understanding the importance of building and development of urban identity as a component of the Krasnoyarsk social environment. The degree of urban identity of the Siberian Federal University students was investigated and compared with other types of social identity and its impact on social attitudes and the basic values in the urban environment. The study involved Bachelor's and Master's students (19-45 years old). As a markers of identity popular cultural, natural, regional and economic symbols of urban stereotypes were used as well as mental and psychological peculiarities beyond ethnic features of inhabitants of Krasnoyarsk (Siberian character: hospitality, pride, strength).

Regardless of the urban identity degree, respondents of different age and gender groups assess positively the possibilities of professional self-realization in the city of Krasnoyarsk and highlight such terminal values as: "to love and to be loved", "to feel safe", "to get a good job", "to be financially independent". At the same time, young people believe that "to become known and famous", "to have power", "to be healthy" - these are the values which are less likely to be realized in the city.

The survey revealed that only 30% of SibFU student's regional identity (Krasnoyarsk citizen, Siberian) prevails over personal and social identity (Woman, Daughter,.. - 50%). 20% of the respondents put civil identity (Russian citizen) in the first place in the hierarchy.

It can be summarized that while building regional identity it is necessary to rely on the socially significant city symbols.
